At last, some progress! The clues from that crumpled piece of paper helped you find the mechanism for the secret doors: cunning magnetically operated latches, operated by a big bar magnet you found in a display case on power generation. You've moved from room to corridor to room, and despite your desire to get out you can't help but being intrigued at their contents. For example, a room filled with wordless prehistoric dioramas shows Neanderthals being zapped by aliens, while early Homo sapiens cower in hiding. This was definitely not in the public museum tour.

Another room contains nothing but a large wall chart. It seems pregnant with meaning (and arrows), but is distinctly lacking any kind of text. A way out?
